

Exercise: Learning about your child's intelligences.

The purpose of this exercise is to focus on the independent choices your child makes in his daily life. His choices help you identify his natural strengths/intelligences.

List three things your child often does in his spare time, things he naturally goes to when no one directs him.

1. _____

2. _____

3. _____

Now look at the list of intelligences, pages 143–144. Next to each of the activities above, write the intelligences that are involved. If there is more than one intelligence for any particular activity, include all. (For clarification, see examples on pages 146–147.)
